National Taipei University

An institution rich in history, National Taipei University (NTPU) began as the Taiwan Provincial College of Public Administration in 1949 to educate and train the country's business and legal elite. In 2000, National Taipei University was reorganized and restructured from the Law and Business College of National Chung-Hsin University. In 2010, NTPU has finally completed the entire relocation project, moving colleges from the downtown campus in Taipei City, to the present San-Shia main campus in New Taipei City. Over the past few decades, NTPU has traditionally played a significant and pivotal role in educating and developing the mid- and high-level talents in the areas of law, business, public administration, humanities as well as social and engineering sciences.

International Program on Urban Governance

The mission of the International Program on Urban Governance is to enhance our understanding of how cities work and what city managers should do to cope with the unprecedented urban challenges. Our curriculum is designed to provide insights into urban governance from global perspectives, while retaining their relevance to the current research and innovations in western countries. All the courses offered by the program are taught in English and utilize creative teaching methods such as field studies, demonstrations, and workshops to facilitate student engagement. Students are required to take 24 credits from courses (10 required credits and 14 elective credits) and complete their Master's thesis (required, no credits). Career opportunities for our graduates include city managers, landscape architects, researchers, data analysts, etc. Several forms of financial aid are available for qualified students.
