

Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań

Doctoral School AMU

Survival skills for (young) scientist: structuring a scientific article editors will take seriously and other perks you wish someone told you before

dr hab. Artur Ciesielski, prof. UAM

Supramolecular Science and Engineering Institute, Strasbourg

ciesielski@unistra.fr

The specificity of scientific work in the discipline of science (Specyfika pracy naukowej w dyscyplinie nauki)

Field of science	science
Teaching method	workshop
Language	English
ECTS credits	-
Numbers of hours	5h
Aims of the course	This course aims at improving the writing skills of early-stage researchers (ESRs) and analysis of present and future career choices.
Course contents	This workshop aims at providing comprehensive overview over the possible career steps and correlated challenges. Furthermore, it will address various points in the career of (young) researchers. Large portion of this workshop will be devoted to improving the writing skills of scientific articles.
Prerequisites and co-requisites	There are no prerequisites.
Learning outcomes
On completion of the course PhD candidates will be able to:	Assessment mode
E_U02, E_U05, E_U06, E_W03	ERS will be asked to write an abstract (layman style) of their PhD project and submit it within one week following the day of the workshop Literature
Additional information	Date of workshop 12 th of February 2021, from 9.30. Classes implemented by the zoom platform